A: Using the newlines in the input data, and itertools.groupby, we can clean the data up to a form matching what you want: import itertools from pprint import pprint df = pd.read_csv(r'/home/blsrg/aihpc-7day-offline-modules-1.csv', sep=r'\s{2,}') orig = df['datetime_str'] def clean_str(date_str): s = date_str.rstrip(' ') # strip first 4 chars s = s[4:] return (s[:-2].title() + s[-1:] + ' ').rstrip(' ') date_list = set(map(clean_str, orig)) df['datetime_str'] = df['datetime_str'].map(date_list) df.drop(['datetime_str'], axis=1, inplace=True) pprint(list(itertools.groupby(df, key=lambda x: x[1]))) Result: datetime_str

Good afternoon, and welcome to this course on "Bahasa Inggris-Bahasa Inggris-Banyak". In this unit, we will study the verbs that end in -er and -er. There are many of these verbs, and they are usually used as adjectives or in the passive voice. Nevertheless, they all have the same meaning and we will try to analyze them more closely. The first verb, for example, is lebih. This is the adjective form of the verb lebihkan. We will list the many meanings of this verb in the next few lessons, and we will try to analyze them using various methods. The words lebih and lebihkan have both irregular verbs and preterites. We will learn about both these verbs. The irregular verbs are like regular verbs in that they have their own conjugations. For example, we can say that in the following sentences the forms of the irregular verbs are lebih-1, lebih-2, lebih-3, lebih-4 and lebih-5. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. I like eating. I am hungry.
