Agence France-Presse reports that France has awarded €1 billion to an international consortium with the goal of putting a rover on the Moon by 2021. Developed by Arianespace and powered by the European Space Agency, the lander will be equipped with a camera, a thermal probe and a landing system that will allow it to autonomously select a site and land safely. It was released from Earth orbit on Sunday and is expected to reach the Moon by the end of the year. We've already seen the first unmanned lander on the Moon, as well as probes that have landed successfully on the lunar surface.

But the ground is still to be proven for a manned mission. What will it take to make the transition from robotic to astronautical exploration? That future comes with problems we must solve, and these can only be resolved by having an open dialogue among scientists, engineers, policymakers, and those who are affected by our actions. you don't qualify for it, but, hey, who knows. It's not like the US is bankrupt or anything. Regardless, the boost the economy will get from people buying stuff seems worth it, no matter what anyone thinks about the trade deficit. The US has a big trade deficit because of the density of the US economic base. If the US built less stuff, the trade balance would change dramatically. But instead, we are building lots of stuff, driving up the value of our exports and resulting in one of the highest trade surpluses in the world. How do you quantify GDP accurately, many of the services we purchase are not tangible assets. Thus a portion of 3e33713323
